Code of Ethics of the German Chemical Society
The GDCh affirms that it and its members defend the principles of freedom, tolerance and truth in science, in particular, with respect to upholding and promoting the reputation of chemistry as well as chemical knowledge and know-how. All GDCh-members are aware that, as scientists, they are especially responsible for the effects of their occupation on mankind and nature. The GDCh and its members support and promote a sustainable and lasting development in society, industry and the environment. They always act fully aware of their responsibility towards future generations. With regard to their work, results and effects, they observe applicable laws and international conventions and oppose the abuse of chemistry, e.g. for producing chemical weapons and addictive drugs. They pledge to uphold the truth in the development, application and dissemination of chemical knowledge and do not use dishonest methods. Members who disobey these principles damage the reputation of science and of this profession. They may be excluded from the GDCh. I have read this Code of Ethics of the GDCh and, with my signature below, hereby affirm to abide by this code for the duration of my membership.
